

Smithsonian Museum of Natural History

Background

A few years back I was in Washington D.C. and visited the Smithsonian Museum of Art. I did not have any expectations of what I would see. I saw a painting by an American artist. The painting was named Whitewater.

The size of the painting was about 6 feet tall by 10 feet long. A huge painting, which caught my eye.

We are all going through Whitewater in our life

Whitewater

The center of the picture was two kids on a makeshift raft that was about to go through a stretch of Whitewater. The two kids were about 8 and 6 years old. The boy was 8 and steering the raft. The girl was 6. They both had looks of fear on their faces. They were about to hit the Whitewater. What I could see is after the Whitewater is clear sailing as far as the eye could see. Above them was a Angel that loved and protected them.

Conclusion

We may all go through Whitewater in our life but we don't know how much we are loved and protected by the good God we serve.
